Betty Blythe, beautiful film star, has been elected the histrionic queen of Princeton University in the 1921 election. She succeeds Norma Talmadge and Maud Adams in Varsity hearts. Each year the men of Princeton elect their favorite actress, the honor being conferred for beauty, charm, refinement and acting ability. Miss Blythe has risen to the heights of film glory this year as the Queen of Sheba in the Fox spectacle of that name. Critics have paid high tribute to her patrician refinement, which, they say, gives dignity to the role and goes a long way towards justifying the semi-nude on the screen. She is the niece of Samuel G. Blythe, famous political authority and writer, and is a college girl, having attended the exclusive West Lake Seminary for Girls in Los Angeles, the University of Southern California, and the Conservatoire of Paris.
